Description :

Prsentation de l'diteur Micky and Sheila are a middle aged couple whose marriage is going nowhere. In an effort to save their relationship Micky buys a campervan and they set off across Europe for the adventure of a life-time. During the course of their travels they inadvertently become involved in a daring jewellery heist, which is committed by a disgraced member of the nobility and his gang of petty villains. Through an unfortunate accident, Micky and Sheila find themselves in possession of 32 million pounds worth of stolen swag. In an effort to clear their names and return the priceless heirloom to its right owner, they recruit the help of their friends, Jan and Tom. Jan is a local nutter, who having recently completed a course via the internet, now believes she has psychic powers. Tom is the vainest young man on the planet, who as a child believed that mashed potato was invented by Martians. Jan holds a public sance, during which she speaks to the ghost of her long dead uncle, who knows the whereabouts of the missing jewels and is demanding a substantial reward for their return. The dastardly villains go in pursuit of Jan and Tom, with the intention of retrieving their swag. While Micky and Sheila hide themselves from the authorities by joining a hippy convoy; who are on their way to Eco-war in an effort to save a local heathland from being developed by big business. Will the insurance company pay out a reward to a ghost? And will Micky and Sheila remain free long enough to clear their names? Is this the funniest book you will ever read?
